

Total Joint Replacement; making a good thing even better

Jacob Munro

Department of Surgery, University of Auckland

Hip and knee replacement are among the most successful surgeries performed. Increasing demand, broadening indications and elevated patient expectations have brought new innovations to maximise outcomes and make best use of health resources. This talk will address changes in system flow, the management of obese patients and the use of emerging technology to achieve these aims